

The 32-pound Carronade that killed Captain Downie aboard the Confiance early in the battle. The muzzle still bears the indentation from the ball that struck the gun forcing it off its carriage and back onto Downie. These photos were taken by Roger Harwood at Macdonough Hall in Annapolis, Maryland.

HMS Confiance's huge anchor has been recovered from Cumberland Bay and is now displayed in Plattsburgh's City Hall. The large, wooden crosspieces have been removed and are shown in the photo to the right. Photos by the author.

Left and above: The grave of Captain George Downie at Plattsburgh's Riverside Cemetery. The officers killed in the battle were interred here, side by side with their American antagonists. The enlisted men were buried together in a mass grave on Crab Island. The gravesite is unmarked to this day. Photos by the author.